ON ILLUSIONS

A public meeting at Lithgow the other day passed a resolution protesting against "the unremained intention of the Government to send the Sydney unemployed into that district to carry out road works." It is hard to please some people. The chance is that when the Local Government Bill has been passed, at our friends at Lithgow carry out their road works at their own cost, they will still be dissatisfied. It may be admitted that probably their chief objection is not to road works, but to the "Sydney unemployed." But here we are once more a touch of human nature, and feel the roughness of it. Who are the Sydney unemployed? What has Sydney done that it should be doomed to bear the penalty of receiving men who are out of work, and loafers who shirk work, from all parts of the colony, and for ever to be a source of trouble to the district? It is natural that Lithgow should regret the responsibility for the unemployed of other districts; but why should Sydney be held responsible for the unemployed from all?

THE BISHOP-CO-ADJUTOR FOR THE

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—It is scarcely a matter for surprise that Australian churches should be so uninformed as to the duties of the Bishop-Coadjutor. The Assistant Bishop of "Cherapeque" was called upon to discharge in the ancient Church, for it is to this office, and not to the office of the Bishop-Coadjutor, that the proposed consecration of Mr. Doves points. It should be clearly understood that Bishops Brisbane and assistant Bishops have different duties. All that is in the province entrusted to the Primate and the Metropolitan of their province. The office of assistant Bishop, or "Cherapeque," is limited, both as to its functions and its sphere of work. The proposal, which has excited much uneasiness for alarm, is simply to confer upon one of the clergy in the Diocese of Brisbane, apostolic, legislative, and executive powers, and to invest him with the degree to supply the spiritual needs of a diocese which is, from its great area, so unwieldy as to defy all that Bishop's efforts to overrule the work. The Church of England in these Australian colonies has been sorely hampered in its action by the exactions of English ecclesiastical law. What then more natural than that the Australian Church should desire to be relieved of this onerous task? The Bishop-Coadjutor should see for a remedy in the practice at the office of the very Ancient Church of Christ? He does so, and he finds anxiety that his future Church requires in the ancient of the "Cherapeque," or Assistant Bishop, whose office and functions are well defined by ancient canons, which place him in direct subordination to his own Bishop. He is not to be a Bishop-in-fact. All he requires is the consent and approval of the Primate, and this he has, and he is to be a Bishop-in-fact. By the way, the only one who has any knowledge of Church history knows perfectly well that the Metropolitan has an undoubted right to consecrate such a bishop if he deems it expedient. But, Sir, I am sure that you will not leave Sydney to do with the question? It is surely a diocesan question as between the diocese of Brisbane and the diocese of Sydney. The circumstances of the consecration taking place in the cathedral of this diocese is a matter of no consequence. By the way, the Bishop-Coadjutor had it been allowed to take place in the cathedral at Brisbane. Really it would seem that the Church in the diocese of Brisbane has good cause to complain of the interference of the Bishop-Coadjutor of Sydney. I commend a passage of Blomfield's "Christian Antiquities," vol. 1, pp. 181-192, to all who wish to know the true meaning of the office of Bishop-Coadjutor to say that the duty is not for distant view, in the absence of endowments and in the face of an ever-increasing population. every diocese in Australia was well equipped to have more than one bishop.

Yours truly,
A. H. H. I am, Sir, O. F. M.

THE MARINE BOARD REGULATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—In your report of the proceedings of the deputation interviewing the Marine Board yesterday, the following statement is given:—“The deputation leaves those who have not read them in ignorance as to the merits of the arguments for and against them. The Marine Board, however, has no objection to the issue of a harbour passenger certificate (and obverse under passenger steamer)—that is, steamers carrying passengers, and not only passengers, but also crew, and the vessel shall be fitted with two lifebuoys, one at each end and one forward of the engine, sufficient to keep crew and passengers afloat in the event of an accident, the whole point is, can this be done? Every practical man says absolutely it cannot. The members of the Marine Board, however, are not practical men, and they know nothing about the construction of steamers, say it can. Moreover, the whole question is to be decided by an unrepresented committee of the Marine Board, and the Marine Board lifebuoys have to be placed, and if he is not satisfied that they are sufficient to keep the vessel afloat she will be ordered to be fitted with more. The Marine Board could an ordinary shipwright be expected to know about the weight of machinery and the specific gravity of water, and the weight of a ship, and the weight of a sink a ship? As regards the six-knot regulation, nearly all the steamship masters in the harbour say it is impossible to maintain six knots in the harbour, and the Marine Board, in any case of a breach of the regulations a magistrate or a jury will have to decide. Who is competent to decide whether a ship is capable of maintaining six or seven knots an hour? Observe, the engineer is the person who drives the engine, and thus regulates the speed of the ship, and the Marine Board is not legally or civilly liable in an accident, happens, if it is held that the regulated speed has been exceeded by the engineer, and the Marine Board is not liable.”

the street musician— and mandacinos to be worn objects of help and pity. As a means of livelihood there are few things that can compete with the barrel organ, especially when the cylinder is constructed with hymns. The advantage of this instrument are to be parent to be more than glanced at. No special treatment is necessary, while even persons with but one hand and a delicate eye of finger on the other, need not despair of attaining considerable proficiency. Both the organ and the fiddle are played by the same children, one about 10, and the other perhaps 12. The elder plays a fiddle, while the younger accompanies with a triangle. The popular assumption is that these infants have a hard life—a pure illusion.
It is not unusual for them to be encountered on the rounds by another tiny band, the likewise distinguished by the same features, but with a more morose disposition, travels alone. The three or clearly competitors, for, when they meet, their vocer-tations are at once forgotten, and a spirited contention ensues accompanied with grins as of bewildered inquiry. It is singular how these children of the blissful land are so easily led into quarrels, and peculiarities of pantomime. That it is a caricature to pity them becomes obvious as they hearken to the sonorous Tucan vocalizations from their infantile lips, and mark how every sentence is sent on its errand with a complicated grimace.

It was who I was preferred to be a disad-vantage philosopher rather than a satisfied pig. His life, the lives of most great men, was spent in battling with hallucinations. Yet it is not certain after all that the career of a contented pig is not preferable to that of a starving saint. And what applies to individuals applies to whole communities as a rule. The Chinese knowledge of the world is coded; but it by no means follows that it is happy ness. There is no reason to suppose that the Chinese will be happier a hundred years hence when their country is reticulated with railways when electric motors roll through the land, and when denying England's possessions in the Pacific by forcing her knees in Asia, England has the most potent possible friend and ally. This is Russia, which has been the ally of England to those who have always regarded Russia, she is, but as she has been painted in the M. of English journals—a portrait which Mr. undertake to show is possessed of about the amount of accuracy of representation as many French caricatures. The only means by which Russia can be regarded as a potent ally is through intercourse with leading Russian officials, and by an estimate of the objects Russia has really been pursuing for a long time, and which are obviously to her no advantage to attain. According to Mr. Russia does not want to add India to her Asiatic empire, but she would like to see England to annex Afghanistan, and will go further east than Herat. She would to have her way in the south-east of Europe eventually must have Constantinople, so as to have her maritime side to the Mediterranean. It is objects it has been the policy of England to do this, but she has regarded it as a necessary assistance in placing Serbia and Bulgaria under a bribe as against Russian influence. As Russia has been systematically thwarted in this way by Russian statesmen, acting upon the supposition that Russia is the historic foe of England in the East, but that she is Russia should retaliate, and is this retaliation, the Russian policy in Russia is hovering on the borders of Afghanistan and England's possessions in India, and to bring England to a sense of what is her real line in Europe. By disquieting England's ruling India, Russia hopes finally to conquer British India to defeat Russian policy in Europe. The Russian policy in Europe is secret of their intention to obtain Constantinople eventually; but their policy in the Balkans is claimed to be one of non-intervention. "Hence all round" is the expressive formula covers Russia's policy in the Balkans. Russian statesmen are said by certain journals in India to be regarding the Russian policy in the most potent instruments in advancing existing Russian prestige in the East, strengthening her hands in case of war by prevailing discontented Indians and Afghans under the idea of Russian power. It is the policy of that power is to assist India, it is as a reason of the more, as England is

The usual monthly batch of the interesting titans of Messrs. Cassell and Co. is to hand. — source, is the Magazine of Art, a truly representative of the best of modern English art. It is a charming little magazine, edited by Mrs. W. G. Russell, who is a well-known painter. Mr. Leader Scott relates Raphael's story with the Marchese Isabella Gonzaga. The book is a beautiful collection of reproductions of the most beautifully carved objects designed to represent the various national styles, such as the Greek, and the paper (illustrated) treating of the various styles of architecture. The other attractions of a fine number of reproduction of Mr. Frank Brumby's "The Quaker" make no introduction. The traditional Quaker is a welcome addition to the magazine. The March number, Goodbye to the Magazine, opens with a new series of illustrations and includes in its numerous attractions an illustration of the paper by H. G. Spenser upon the Flash River. Little Poles is charming — when it is not the youngsters whose youth is spent in it. So much care and pains are lavished upon their work and their results are so good.

The Rev. W. G. Connell sends us a copy of Temperance and Temperance: or, the History of the Temperance Movement in the United States, as related by the Rev. W. G. Connell, of Sydney. The pamphlet is a collection of the wise named in Scripture, and with the problem of temperance.

Mr. G. W. Connell sends us a copy of a book of blank plates of wood of blank plates of carbon for various purposes in connection with wood, destruction of rabbits, and use of the same in the manufacture of wood. The book is in view of the recent discovery in some of the most well-known processes the value of the same to some extent. As to rabbit destruction, the value of blank plates is well-known, and to be largely used.

Mr. A. B. McDowell, M.A., is the author of a book on *The History of the Temperance Movement, or, a short history of the temperance movement, calculated to show the application to the economic and agricultural progress of the modern statistical method. right then we should be selflessly giving up our right at the same time not impudently so, but with too much anticipation. We are quite ready to walk alone. The Church of England people thought say, when Bishop BARRY leaves the diocese, "We will appoint a Bishop from overseas, our native clergy;" but wouldn't that be commendable valour or proper self-reliance? Though we ask the people to walk on with all gentleness and hope, their inability is inevitable. We are not quite prepared to be a closed corporation. That the day is coming to fulfilment of Lord CARRINGTON's hopes. We have no right to defy discretion and expediency. We can trust to the natural growth of the sentiment of a people; we need to beware of any attempt to force it at growth. A hot-house nationalism is opposed to which we have referred would be a dangerous thing; a patient and moderate self-reliance will give us what we should have in the end. A young country cannot nurse with impunity to receive new blood from her sources of growth; it is what she needs.

...refusing new blood, whereas a man who is born in the country has satisfied the requirements and the conditions set for a very respectable position, he should not receive encouragement, but should be allowed to prefer. He should make himself a servant to the country, since he is a man and knows her life and feels her inspiration in him, than any other. But we as we are wise while we look favourably on our possibilities; and doing that, we may still find comfort in happy memories of the kind that Lord Campbell conveyed to us.

Some nice questions often arise in the difficult succession of newspaper topics, and especially how we have one before us, political and otherwise. It is that of comparison between the intelligence and general practices of the power of English and Colonial authorities. Like many discussions this one has arisen from small beginnings. Someone writes to the paper complaining of ladies' coloured clove collar-slating rings. Then follows a diatribe against "dudes from the old world; youths of high collars and low heads; men of idle dispositions," &c. Another correspondent appears praising the English youth as one who "takes life more seriously, sticks close to business, and spends longer hours than the majority of his the "Australasian" cousins," while he predicted that the standard of intelligence will be higher in England than here until "the younger men of Australia devote less time to horse-racing and betting, and spend the measure in the study of history, literature and politics." This in turn, as might be expected, has been challenged by several correspondents on the other side.

We may very fairly at this stage, in the development of our country, draw conclusions between our "sons of the soil" and those from other lands; for the latter are sufficiently singular, our distinctive conditions of life and climate have had the influence, and certain characteristics which are the outgrowth of our national habit are clearly defined. In new country there is at first a vigorous fusion, such a balancing of the old and the new, the foreign and the local, that the native people be chosen as a real national type. The fusion is still going on rapidly, but there is now so great a reservoir of well-defined national characteristics that the process is one of quick absorption and assimilation, not one of much activity of elements. An Australian is now a definite type as an American, a Frenchman, or a Turk. That is, he can be distinguished as a rule from the Englishman, the Armenian as the Armenian may be distinguished from the Turk, or the Aleutian from the Parisian. He has maintained his own particularly his own; he has habitually mentalities which are "to the manner born." If he has not had training in English schools, he has certain intellectual qualities which stamp him as one who has grown up in the Southern Cross. He is all the better for that, particularly if he has lived the best of the life that this country can afford to a youth. That would be an unfortunate disadvantage indeed which, being new, had no traditions quite its own strong enough to help and inspire a manifold peculiar to itself. Just as the different professions and trades and arts produce their own types, so do these types take on again the characteristics which are national. But when we come to estimate the values of different national types, we have a task which, however interesting, is difficult and from suggesting anything like finality or argument in such a case may be approximate; it cannot be ultimate. The estimator is unwise who stakes the correctness of his powers of discrimination on the hazard of such a die.

What has Australia produced in the way of national character? It needs no CARLYLE to tell us. The ordinary observer may see that the Australian in the first place is energetic and original. There may be different opinions on his energy and his originality, but he is so marked that with them reckoning must be made. The energy is of a kind; it is brusque, but it is in a different; it is more muscular than patient it is there. Because the energy is direct, as little given to refined calculation or how to conserve forces, than the more complex and more likely to be originality. Originality seems to be a function of energy, springing from necessity, and in a young country necessity is the close attendant of progress. It is possible that we might have been always for the forms this energy takes, but none of the originality take, but none of the doubt their great possibilities. But we are a daring element in what a young Australian which gives him what would appear to be over-confidence. But it is not over-confidence may be inferred from the fact that he succeeds where it is better. There are few natives who are not a keen commercial instinct well developed, and a practical turn to their minds. That they are capable of good things.

The young Englishman cannot beat the

A dingy race took place yesterday between the Euse and Violet near a bank of Lake Superior. The course was to Shark Island, round a buoy off Fort Macquarie, round the "Pine Point" light house, back to the shore at the start and rounded Shark Island. Euse lessened the distance from Pine-point buoy, but could not manage to catch the Violet, who won by six minutes.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT AND THE EXTINGUISHMENT OF THE DEFICIT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Will you kindly grant me the privilege, through the medium of your valuable columns, to tender my thanks, as receiving of the good office," to the Colonial Treasurer, for putting me in possession of a financial statement that I can comprehend without doing violence to my reasoning powers? Mr. W. H. Miller seems exactly the right man in the right the remaining facts of the case. The charges are plain and unvarnished. His statements are plain and simple, and by their very simplicity carry conviction. The charges are not made by Mr. Garret's figures is distorted, and the real condition of our affairs nearly shown. It is entirely agreeable to the common sense of the country in its general policy, and although it could not be introduced at once, few will be disposed to cavil at the delay. Mr. Millican's statement is correct. He certainly has not had sufficient time to elaborate a comprehensive and well-considered scheme of reform. The charges are plain and unvarnished. The article would indeed be a blunder, which in point of view is a crime—a blunder. More-over, he is, believe me, quite right in deferring the report of the matter, but I regret, however, that I should be compelled to disagree with the Treasurer on a very important topic. The article would indeed be a blunder, which in point of view is a crime—a blunder. More-over, he is, believe me, quite right in deferring the report of the matter, but I regret, however, that I should be compelled to disagree with the Treasurer on a very important topic. More-over, he is, believe me, quite right in deferring the report of the matter, but I regret, however, that I should be compelled to disagree with the Treasurer on a very important topic.

which case the accounts would have been equalized, and the Government would have been justified in doing anything of the kind? How easy to prove the contrary, and not only that he would not have been justified, but that he could not have done so. The Government had no right to make any Act of 1884, which was passed by the Government of which he was a member. I will give the proof of this, and I will show that the Government for making such a statement is not far to seek, and it only affords another proof that the Government were wrong. The Government has to do all deeds which it does on the basis of the law, and the law which has to be excused, the thing itself is subordinated to the excuse which has to be found. Now, Mr. McMillan had to find an excuse for proposing a certain duty, and he found it in the inefficiency and, no doubt, to him none appeared readier or more convincing, than Mr. Dibble's oft-repeated assertion, surely, if Mr. Dibble's assertion was true, that the lands of the United States were being sold at a loss, and the lands which, by withdrawing, created a deficit, Mr. McMillan would be justified in stating that and to pay it off. It can hardly have escaped the vigorous notice of the House that the Government's withdrawal of the public lands from sale, and various duties were imposed by special enactment, and higher rates obtained for the same lands. The Act of 1884, especially in order that the balance of expenditure and revenue should be equalized, and the sale of the public lands beyond a certain limit should be prohibited, was passed. The non-sale of the public lands caused the deficit inasmuch as saying that the policy of the act was to raise duties and increase rents and other conditions of sale, and that the Government would not have had never been imposed and the land sold. But the land could not be sold, because the Act of 1884 expressly forbade it. It was not a matter of right, it was a matter of law, therefore, Mr. Dibble would have had no justification. His estimate of revenue and expenditure never disclosed any such intention. If they had, it would have been a matter of public knowledge, and some foundation for the statement—there is none whatever without it. It would be quite as reasonable to assert that one man's poverty is the right of another man's wealth. Mr. McMillan's contention that Treasury bonds should not issue unless by providing an

to demand investigation. If the principle be admitted it follows that the impoverishment of the State is the certain and unavoidable consequence of such a policy. The economy in expenditure, retrenchment in the public service (which is the second of the two), and fair taxation of property, the revenue of the State, provide a legitimate fund from which to wipe out the deficiency, whereas if the public estate is forced into the market for such a purpose, it is really relieved by disavowing the public credit and ressource. If this rough and ready method of getting rid of such a huge infestation is tolerated, where might not the same policy be applied to the enormous and extravagant and folly if a perpetually recurring deficit could be thus disposed of? And unduly the credit of the State would only be a matter of time. The Minister says, "I have no objection to the idea that we should put away £300,000 or £500,000 at the end of every year to liquidate this account. If it delusive, and has been shown to be delusive, it is chemical and delusive in the adjoining colony where last over half-a-million? Is Mr. McMan prepared to admit that in a well-governed free-trade colony with unbounded resources, it is chimerical and delusive to believe that a surplus is possible, although in an adjoining protectionist colony with limited resources, it is possible to raise the rule and not the exception?
